We have investigated the expression of Na+-stimulated outward K+ transport in the epithelium of mouse and rat proximal tubules using patch-clamp and the excised inside-out technique on the apical membrane. A cytosolic ATP-dependent pump and a phloridzin-sensitive, Na+-dependent, outward-directed K+ channel were identified. Larger Na+-dependent currents in mouse than in rat were paralleled by a higher abundance of outwardly rectifying anion channels in the former. We interpret the different contributions of Na+-dependent and basal transepithelial K+ transport as a probable consequence of species-related differences in transepithelial voltage and, more specifically, in the size of the driving force for cation transport.Q: How to calculate direct line of sight in an Android game? I'm building a 2D game in Android, and I want to be able to calculate the direct line of sight, and the angle of view. I don't want to use OpenGL. The biggest problem is that I need to calculate the direction the player looks, and the size of the viewable area. It seems like this would be simple enough if I was building a 2D game in the browser. If I had a 2D canvas, the answer would be clear. But I don't have a canvas. I started learning about using the gps co-ordinates of the phone, and found the Math.atan2, but it doesn't work. The camera is at (0,0) at the start of my game, and while travelling the co-ordinates change. Thanks A: I've done a decent amount of work using a simple 2D polygon with six vertices (for a rotating sprite), however, I can't guarantee this is the best way

> Jungler The Jungler is a core position, one of the three main roles of an AD Carry. It is the jungler's job to scout and rotate to a safe lane. It can either try to invade or deal with the enemy team, with or without their support. When you start the game, you will probably have to deal with the Jungle Dragon, of the bottom-lane, who will try to gank you. In the meantime, you will find the other jungler, who will put you in a lane that you can control. The other one will, in its turn, protect the lane, and at some point, will give you his lane to dominate. The Jungler's role is to control the jungle. It has three different ways to get the advantage and do the most to its team. Control of the jungle means knowing when to go in, going out, and putting pressure to the enemy team. In order to do this, the Jungler has three main skills: stealth, vision, and ganking. Stealth. To get the advantage over the enemy jungler. To reach your enemy, you have to control the buff area. If you are determined enough, you will be able to plant a ward there. And then, the enemy can't surprise you. This is the perfect opportunity to go in and gank a part of the enemy team. The enemy jungler will have to deal with you to allow the rest of your team to get a part of the experience. Jungler (ジャングラーズ) The Jungler's job is to control the jungle.
