Futurama has been in the news for all the wrong reasons recently. It looks like the new series has been axed by the BBC and FOX who will not be airing any new episodes. However, after the last series aired in the U.K. the show was successfully brought back with the relaunch of Futurama on Comedy Central. However, it will be a while before we get to see the new season. The last two seasons have scored only moderate ratings so it's highly unlikely that FOX will be renewed. This would leave the show in the odd situation of being on both FOX and Comedy Central in the U.S. This isn't the first time that this has happened. In 2013 The Big Bang Theory was re-launched as a four-seasons series on the same network. We can only hope the next four seasons on Comedy Central are as successful as the last two on FOX. What are your thoughts on this news? Will you miss Futurama if it goes? Let us know in the comments! The wait is over, I finally received my refund check for the sale of my iPhone 6 Plus. I sold the phone to Apple, but in the end I got a refund. I was able to get the money back because Apple was offering the phone for free with the purchase of a new iPhone. The conditions of the offer state that there would be no money in the account for the week between the offer and the actual purchase. I still feel pretty good about it. I got a ton of money for a phone that I would have thrown out. Now that my phone is gone I am looking to sell more games for the iPhone. I have checked around the web and have found some cool games that I want to get. I got three games from mobile game
